WIN SUCCESS IN NURSING

The Best Paying Occupation--- Free Scholarships.

Nursing the sick is perhaps the most attractive field for the ambitious woman who would win success and make the most of life. It is a refined occupation. It gives skill to the hand and grace to the heart. It is the best paying occupation now open to women, and presents an ever-widening field of opportunity. The call for nurses is a world-wide call. It is the one calling that is not overcrowded.

The demand for skilled nurses increases with the years. Thousands of young women have the natural graces of the skilled nurse, but have never had a chance to cultivate them and so have been prevented from improving their own condition and blessing the race. But a new day has dawned. Large hearted philanthropists have opened wide the door of opportunity at the Philadelphia School for Nurses, 2219 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. A Two Years' Free Course has been established at this Institution, wherein the student is provided with room, board, laundry, nurse uniforms, and all the refinements of a good home, with suitable training, instruction and actual nursing in the homes of the poor and among people of moderate income, and at the end of the Course the student's fare home is paid.

The term can be shortened to eighteen months by a Course of six months reading and studying at home—a course which is very valuable in itself. Hundreds of young women, scattered all over the country, are started in the work, becoming not only self-supporting, but a boon to their respective neighborhoods.

A Short Course is also provided for the woman who wishes to quickly prepare for self-support and a substantial income. Enrollment is now in progress for a class of four hundred students in the Resident Courses next year. Young women from the smaller towns and country districts are favored in the distribution of scholarships, with a view of conveying hospital knowledge to all rural communities.

Over Land and Over Water.

Hall's Statistics of the West, published in 1836, has an interesting account of the work of Col. Long, U. S. A. Engineer Corps, in the improvement of the Ohio, below Louisville, in the construction of wing dams "so as to confine the current of the river within narrow bounds, and to give it a sufficient volume to was a channel for itself."

But the means at the command of Col. Long were limited and the wing dams constructed of piles driven into the sand in a short time disappeared.

In commenting on the effort of Col. Long, Judge Hall says: "The only objection to any of these measures is that they have not been attempted on a scale of magnitude becoming their importance. The Western plain is the center of our empire, the citadel of its strength, the magazine of its resources, the heart whose healthful operation must throw out vigor and nourishment to the whole continent, and here should the Nation lay deep and broad the foundation of its future greatness."

The words of Judge Hall are applicable today to the great artery of the continent, the Ohio river, and that which he urged should be urged today by every community in the six Ohio river states, to undertake its improvement on a scale becoming its importance, with all that can be given by a great Nation for if the Western plain is the heart of the country, and it is, the Ohio river is the great artery by which the rich, red blood of the heart is to be pulsed giving life to trade and commerce where now, because of inadequate means of transportation, there is too often stagnation.

Judge Hall also states a fact which existed in 1836 and which every interest in the Ohio Valley knows exists today. He cites the fact that the old time carriage of goods from the seaboard over the Alleghenies to Pittsburgh cost the merchant $6 per 100 pounds while, as he says, "We have instances in the last five years of merchandise being delivered at the wharf of Cincinnati for $1 per 100 pounds from Philadelphia by way of New Orleans. That is to say $6 per 100 pounds for overland carriage of 550 miles and $1 per 100 pounds for a waterway carriage of over 2,500 miles. The same difference exists between railway rates and water rates today and will continue to exist in the Ohio river states until the completion of the Nine Foot Stage from Pittsburgh to Cairo. Whether by stage in the 50's or by rail today the tax of overland carriage of freight is a most grievous burden which the improved Ohio would remove.

Doctors Could Not Help Her.

"I had kidney trouble for years," writes Mrs. Raymond Conner, of Shelton, Wash., "and the doctors could not help me. I tried Foley's Kidney Cure, and the very first dose gave me relief and I am now cured. I can not say too much for Foley's Kidney Cure." It makes the diseased kidneys sound so they will eliminate the poisons from the blood. Unless they do this, good health is impossible. Sold by J. H. Orme.

"The Lord Loves a Cheerful Giver."

That "the Lord loves a cheerful giver, nobody who believes in the Bible will deny. A stingy person may be full of good intentions, but it is an old saying that "the streets of hell are paved with good intentions"—good intentions that were withheld by selfishness. A fellow who continually indulges "pipe dreams" about how largely he intends to give when he acquires the fortune of Rockefeller, is wrong at heart. A dime given of your necessity is more precious in the sight of the Lord than a million given of your superfluity. With most of us life is largely made up of small things and if we neglect our opportunity to make small gifts and sacrifices, of our want or necessity, to help in the furtherance of a good cause, or to brighten the pathway and lighten the burden of some one more unfortunate than ourselves, or of those who by reason of kinship or otherwise it may be our duty to assist in "lagging over" the hard places, we are apt to come to our end without anything to our credit on the gift side of the line.

Choosing a Wife.

The vivacious lady who writes under the pseudonym of "Dorothy Dix" has turned from her task of instructing girls and women to bestow some good counsel upon young men who contemplate matrimony.

There is no better way, she says, to get a real line on the sort of a wife the girl will make than to go camping in her company. Matrimonial excursions ought to be conducted for the benefit of would-be Benedicts.

"If you find a girl who takes along sensible clothing, who always manages to look neat; who is always willing to lend a helping hand and do her part; who knows how to do things and get a cinder out of an eye, or make a pan of biscuits or cut sandwiches; who does not get cross or sulky if the train is late, or a campfire won't burn or it happens to rain, but who on the contrary, is cheerful, full of expedients, and possesses the knack of making the best of things, then rest assured that you have found a pearl among women, who will make a wife that will enhance in value as the years go by, and who will cause you to bless the day that you led her to the altar."

Dorothy says it is easy enough to discover whether a girl will make a nagging wife or not. "If you see a girl who can never let any little thing rest, but who harps continually on a mistake or some offense, real or financial, know by this token that she is one of the foreordained husband baiters.

"Woe to the man who is taken by her pretty face, is indiscreet enough to marry her! She will taunt him forever with the money he has lost, the man he lent his overcoat to, the night he forgot to put the cat out, and every other sin of omission and commission in the calendar that he commits.

"If you wish to ascertain if you will be hen-pecked if you marry a certain girl, observe her in her own family.

"If she is the boss of her own home, rest assured that she will boss yours. If her father has to sit on the back porch to smoke his pipe you will never be permitted to realize your dreams of a quiet cigar by your hearthstone.

"If her mother begins every sentence with 'Mamie says' you will never be allowed an opinion of your own after you are Mamie's husband.

"If you see a girl who forces her poor old father to work himself to death to supply her heartless demands for chiffons, you have got as good a tintype as you need of the way you will have to hump yourself to buy her picture hats and lace coats that you cannot afford.

"If you see a girl that sits in the parlor reading novels while her tired mother washes the dishes in the kitchen, you have a living picture of the way you will have to get up and get breakfast and roll the perambulator while your wife indulges in nerves, if you are idiotic enough to marry her."

England's Historic Miser.

John Camden Neild, whose magnificent bequest to Queen Victoria supplied the funds out of which the prince consort built the present Balmoral castle, deserves a place among the great misers and was as remarkable a man as any of them. He was educated at Eton and Trinity college, Cambridge, and was a barrister at Lincoln's Inn. At the age of thirty-four his father's death placed him in possession of a fortune of £250,000, and from that moment he became a confirmed miser. Neild lived at 5 Cheyne walk, Chelsea. His big house was so meanly furnished that it did not even boast of a bed. Two old women, who did his chores, and a black cat were his sole companions. When he visited his large estates in the Midlands, which he did frequently, he generally walked unless he could get a lift for nothing, and he was not even above taking a gratuitous seat on a dung cart. Sometimes he was compelled by the weather to take a seat on the stagecoach, and there he would sit outside, shivering and dripping, for he never wore a greatcoat, an object of commiseration to his fellow passengers.

Lincoln's Rebuke.

The saying that there are few honest lawyers did not hold true in the case of Lincoln. A man once called to retain him on a suit.

"State your case," said honest Abe. The man did, and then Lincoln said: "I cannot represent you, for you are wrong, and the other party is right."

"That is none of your business if I employ you," said the client.

"Pardon me," said the man who afterward became president; "my business is never to defend wrong. I never take a case that is manifestly wrong."

"Well, but you can make trouble for the other fellow."

"Yes," said Lincoln, "I can set a whole community at loggerheads, I can make trouble for this widow and her fatherless children and by so doing get you $900 that rightfully belongs to her, but I won't do it."

"Not if I pay you well?"

"Not for all the money you are worth," was the reply.

A Warrior Too.

The wooden boards that had marked the graves in a certain rural cemetery rotted off and were raked up in the spring cleaning. Consequently on Memorial day when the delegation from the G. A. R. arrived with flags and appropriate floral decorations for their departed comrades the decorating committee found itself somewhat in doubt as to which grave belonged to Captain Blodgett and which to Hannah Ericson. The mistaken delegates heaped their offerings upon Hannah's last resting place and departed. That afternoon Ericson, the widower, drifted, with the rest of his world, to the cemetery. When he saw the flag and the flowers above Hannah the astonished Swede fell to chuckling joyously.

"Well," he exclaimed delightedly, "those fuller bane poety smart tool. Ay tank dat vor all right and som gude yoke on Hannah—be vor poety gude fighter herself!"—Youth's Companion.

Devonshire Terrace.

Dickens was twenty-seven years old when, in 1839, he moved from Doughty street to Devonshire terrace. George du Maurier lived for some years in 1 Devonshire terrace. In this celebrated house Dickens wrote no fewer than ten of his books—"The Old Curiosity Shop," "Barnaby Rudge," "The Christmas Carol," "American Notes," "Martin Chuzzlewit," "The Hanted Man," "The Battle of Life," "Dombey and Son," "The Cricket on the Hearth" and "David Copperfield." Devonshire terrace was situated at the corner of the Marylebone road and used to be called the smallest terrace in London.

It Varied.

The late Judge Saunders of North Carolina was noted as an angler, but he had a poor memory as to the weight of the fish he had taken. On one occasion a friend, trying to entrap him, said, "Say, judge, what was the weight of that big catfish you caught the other day?"

The judge turned to his waiter and said, "Bob, what did I say that catfish weighed?"

"What time yesterday, boss—in de mawnin', at dinner or after suppah?"

The Moon.

Astronomers long since came to the conclusion that the moon's surface is very hot during the height of the lunar day, which, as will be remembered, lasts two weeks, and very cold during the lunar night, which is equally long. These extremes of temperature reach their height at the lunar noon and midnight and are greater than any natural temperatures on the earth.

Outcome Always Same.

A Philadelphian was praising for his learning and uprightness the late Judge M. Russell Thayer.

He quoted the moving passage from Judge Thayer's will:

"Owing to the fact that almost my entire life has been passed in the public service of the United States and of the state of Pennsylvania, I have but a small estate to leave to my dear children and wife."

"Judge Thayer," he continued, "was a very honorable man. First as a lawyer, afterward as a judge, he treated all with whom he had dealings with the greatest fairness. Once, years ago, after he had served me well in a difficult case, I remonstrated with him about the smallness of his fee.

"Well," he said, smiling, and smelling the flower in his buttonhole, "I, you know, am not that type of lawyer whose client once said:

"I never was entirely ruined but twice. Once when I lost a lawsuit and once when I gained one."—Washington Star.
